Yogi who could walk on water
Once, a young man goes out of the village in search of a guru who would teach him yoga.
After wandering around in many places, finally he learnt yoga from one of the many yogis he had met.
After being with that yogi for many years and learning different types of yogas, this man returns to his village as a sadhu.
The people from the village were happy to see him return to the village after many years. They respected him and asked him what he had learned from the yogis he had met.
I have practiced yoga for all these years by performing austere sadhana. There are different types of siddhis and I have also acquired siddhi.
The simple villagers listened to him attentively and were wondering what siddhis he must have learned.
Being very proud the yogi said

I have acquired a siddhi in which I can walk over water.
The villagers were not very happy to hear about the siddhi he had achieved and they all walked away from him but one elderly person waited there to talk to him.
What great thing you have achieved by performing austerities for so many years? You have learned something which can be very easily done simply by spending two paisa. I can pay two paisa to the boatman and cross over the river. What is the need to walk over water?
MORAL:

There are many types of yogis, but he who is devoted to Krishna is the topmost yogi. Those who are Krishna conscious are not befooled by yogis who claim to be Bhagavan. A Krishna conscious person wants only to serve the foremost yogi, Yogesvara, which means “master of all mystic power.”
